FOUNDER'S MESSAGE TO LLMC PARTICIPANTS

Troy Crosby
Assistant Deputy Minister,
Materiel, National Defence

“Thank you” doesn’t feel like enough to describe how happy we are, for you to have made the commitment to join the Lifting As You Lead Mentoring Circles program 3rd edition, organized by the Diversity and Inclusion Office, Materiel Group, National Defence, and open to all Federal Public Service members.

What began as a simple idea from our consultations has grown into a thriving network, addressing the desire for meaningful networking and professional growth.

There’s Power in People Coming Together

You're now part of a diverse network of inclusive-minded leaders, assigned to a circle—a small, trusted group for goal achievement in a safe space. This circle will facilitate learning from others' experiences and diverse perspectives, expanding your knowledge and tactical skills.

LLMC offers a unique opportunity for sponsorship, especially for deserving equity groups. Sponsorship is an intentional relationship where influential individuals advocate for career advancement and barrier removal.

By actively engaging with your circle, sharing experiences, and fostering connections, you'll unlock personal and professional growth opportunities. This knowledge empowers you to advance in your career.

Agenda

Mastering the Art of Negotiation

"Win-win is a belief in the Third Alternative. It's not your way or my way; it's a better way, a higher way."

Stephen Covey, author and educator

"There are three ways of dealing with difference: domination, compromise, and integration. By domination only one side gets what it wants; by compromise neither side gets what it wants; by integration we find a way by which both sides may get what they wish."

Mary Parker Follett, management consultant, social worker, philosopher, pioneer in the fields of organisational theory and organisational behaviour

1. Check-In: Warm up and get going (17 minutes)

1.1 Welcome (~1minute)

Welcome everyone to our third circle. Today, we will be discussing how we can master the art of negotiation.

We have all participated in thousands of negotiations during our lifetime. We negotiate all the time at work. Some things we might negotiate for are time off, second language training, or an assignment in another Department. We often go into a negotiation like it's a battle, but a negotiation works best for both parties when we focus on a win-win outcome.

1.2 Your Health Comes First (~1 minute)

Before we begin today's Circle, let's do a check-in. The intent of these sessions is to have safe conversations about important subjects that will help transform the Federal Public Service by creating diverse and inclusive psychologically safer workplaces.

The subjects may be difficult for some people to discuss. If at any point during this session you feel that you need to step away, you may leave the session in order to protect your mental health. Your health comes first.

If you need to talk to someone, whether before, during, or after a circle, there is support available to you 24/7. Please see the support section at the end of this guide for contact information.

1.3 Overview (1 minute)

In workplace negotiations, it is important to be well-prepared. This preparation can include gaining a good understanding of your 'ask', how it will impact your team or organisation, and ways this impact can be mitigated. Not only can this make you ready to respond to potential objections, it will let the other party know that you have considered more than your needs and are looking to achieve a mutually beneficial outcome. After all, the negotiation process is about crafting a relationship and understanding your needs as well as the other persons.

There are also cultural considerations, implicit biases, and discriminatory practices that we have to acknowledge. By recognizing the bias within our structural and cultural systems that may affect how people negotiate, we are better able to empower deserving equity groups as they advocate and negotiate for themselves, while also enabling systemic change within our organisations.

Developing negotiation skills that increase the likelihood of success not only helps us benefit from that negotiation, but also in future negotiations, as our feelings about the process influence how we deal with the next one. Negotiation skills also help to develop a balance between empathy and assertiveness as we learn to manage our emotions and reactions so as to prevent them affecting our judgement and behaviour.

During this Circle, we will focus on strategies that can result in a positive outcome for all parties. Let's get started!

Negotiation		One Action
1	I will cultivate a safe environment where team members feel confident, and can approach me to negotiate their needs. (example: a neurodiverse team member requesting an accommodation).	Use the key video messages, the Circle 3 resources , and the experiences of your fellow Circle members to prepare your One Action.
2	I will meet with my team leader to add my career aspirations to my Public Service Performance Management agreement.
3	I will negotiate for an adjustment to my work situation that will benefit me. (This could be an acting assignment, income averaging or second language training).
4		Write down your One Action commitment in the table cell to the left and get ready to report about it at Circle #4.

5. Wrap-up: What's next and a few final words (5 minutes)

Thank you everyone for your active participation in this week's topic Mastering the Art of Negotiation. We hope that by seeing negotiation as a collaborative process that can benefit all parties, you will look forward to your next negotiation and feel more confident in your ability to use these newly acquired tools.

Video: “Three Steps to Getting What You Want in a Negotiation”

Key Video Messages

This video empowers you with the tools and strategies for successful self-negotiation. You'll discover how an empathetic approach and how conscientiously thinking about the various dimensions at stake in a particular request can lead to a most deserving win. By embracing a collaborative perspective, you'll take into account what your manager wants and leverage that knowledge to strike a mutually beneficial deal. This video also elaborates on the importance of strategic negotiation:

- Do your research

- Preparing for the negotiation by understanding your own needs, those of your organisation and what solutions may be available will likely lead to a more successful outcome. Thoughtful preparation shows that you took the time to consider the needs of your team and organisation. It is also an indicator of the respect you have for the person with whom you are in negotiations.
- Instead of viewing negotiation as a win/lose scenario, approach it as an opportunity for collaboration and troubleshooting. Engaging in the negotiation process enables us to build stronger relationships, as we acknowledge that cooperation involves both giving and taking.

- Mentally Prepare

- Prepare yourself for the possibility that your request will be denied. Embrace defensive pessimism, anticipating the worst while recognizing that the results are not reflective of your inherent worth. By adopting this mindset, you are less likely to be anxious and to disrupt your negotiation. A lack of emotional attachment to any outcome will empower you to handle potential objections and be open to other possible alternatives. It is also worth recognizing when to walk away if your minimum requirement is not being met. Note: The LLMC Team acknowledges that some negotiations may be of a nature that do not allow us to embrace defensive pessimism.

- Put yourself in another's shoes

- Understand that your request has the potential to impact the professional lives of others, including the person with whom you are in negotiation. How will this impact their relationship with the rest of the team, their workload and how they are seen by the individuals to whom they report? Will they even have the authority to allow your request? Communicate your request with a clear rationale, emphasising that it's not just about you but rather about achieving your professional goals and benefiting the entire team.
